

Four-Year Graduation Plan - Courses and Critical Benchmarks

The following is a sample course of study. It is the Student's responsibility to ensure that all program requirements are met. This guide is not a substitute for academic advisement. All incoming freshmen must develop an academic plan (which maps out all courses needed to graduate within your intended major/degree). Your academic advisor is available to meet with you and create your specific plan.

Your path to graduation may vary slightly based on factors such as college credit you earned while in high school, transfer work from other institutions of higher learning and placement in Mathematics. You are responsible for checking prerequisites to any courses. Critical Courses and minimum recommended grades (as noted below) provide feedback regarding major fit and help indicate likelihood of successful completion of chosen academic program and degree.

Career Opportunities

“What can I possibly do with a history major?” A common misconception is that the only thing available after graduation is to teach history. That is a possible path, but certainly not your only option. Among the many jobs you can consider are: advertising, analyst, archivist, broadcaster, campaign worker, consultant, congressional aide, editor, foreign service, foundation staffer, information specialist, intelligence, journalist, legal assistant, lobbyist, personnel manager, public relations. . . the list is almost endless.

More specifically, with your degree in history you can work as an educator (primary, secondary or post-secondary schools, historic sites and museums); as a researcher (museums, think tanks, cultural resources management, preservation); as a communicator (writers, archivists, librarians); as an advocate (lawyers, legislative staff, foundations.); and in business (contract historians, non-profits, corporation staff).

Program Description

The undergraduate history program at UMKC offers majors the opportunity both to explore a wide range of historical fields and to develop expertise in a particular area of study. Courses are generally divided into three categories: 1) broad surveys, 2) specialized lecture courses, and 3) seminars. Writing is emphasized in virtually all history courses, even at the survey level, and research is integrated into many of them. Because writing, analysis, oral presentation, argumentation, and critical thinking form the essence of historical study and debate, the history major prepares students for careers in a variety of fields: law, journalism, teaching, business, public service, library sciences, museums and archives, international work, historical research, and many more. Because historical study highlights the variety and complexity of the human experience and fosters an appreciation for long-term processes of change, the history major also prepares students to be responsible and thoughtful citizens of the world.

The history department faculty members have developed a set of carefully crafted learning objectives. Simply put, we expect history majors to acquire specified levels of knowledge, perspectives, and skills through the study of the past. The learning objectives are designed to help you succeed in your undergraduate history major, as independent, creative, and self-directed learners. More important, they will help you to be successful in your pursuit of a career and to hold a life-long appreciation for the humanities and social sciences.
